

U of S hosts Kane Competition

About 150 high school students from 13 high schools participated in the University of Scranton's 11th Annual Kane Competition for high school physics and engineering students. Students competed individually and in teams through a series of quizzes and hands-on challenges. Aaron Goryl and Scott Lougee, both of North Pocono High School, came in first and second place, respectively. North Pocono team No. 1 came in third place in the group competition. From left are, seated, University of Scranton instructor Nicholas Truncale, Scott Lougee and adviser John Croom; standing, Jerrid Carmen Demeck, Eric Woelkers, Marissa Wolfe, Justin Robert Gensel and Aaron Goryl.
